ATHLETIC CONTESTS FOR AVERAGE STUDENTS NOW

Chapel Hill, Oct. 3.—Recognizing the value of athletic sports for college students, the University authorities are trying in every way this year to develop a sane and wholesome interest in outdoor games and exercises. The general participation of all students in athletics is urged—each man after his own capacity and interest, under the best direction and with adequate facilities. Although there will be as much interest as ever in the various teams representing the University in contests with other colleges, special emphasis will be laid on athletic contests for the great mass of the students, the majority of whom can never make a team; many, moreover, who are not physically equipped for strenuous competition. It is recognized, however, that these men can be greatly benefited by games out of doors, and special provisions are made for them accordingly.

A middle group of men—the average athletes—will be given opportunity for a somewhat more strenuous training, with work that requires some endurance and skill. Men in this group will contest on the various class teams in foot ball, basket ball, tennis and baseball, and will receive suitable training under special coaches. They will figure entirely in intramural contests. For the first class athlete, who has attained excellence by virtue of his ability and training, still another type of training will be provided, even more strenuous than the second, and under the direction of highly skilled coaches. Attention will not be given to these men, however, to the neglect of the other two.
